We at the NJ-based South Asian women's rights organization, Manavi, fully support Queering the Air's Justice Not Vengeance Campaign in response to the recent suicide of Rutgers student, Tyler Clementi. We, along with many others from the New Brunswick community were shocked and saddened by this recent tragedy. We stand alongside the Rutgers LGBTQ Community in their approach toward this issue, noting how we must address the issue of homophobia in all of our communities and stand up against all forms of discrimination. This includes questioning the way in which Molly Wei and Dharun Ravi have been targeted with xenophobic and racist remarks and sentiments throughout this whole incident. We do not agree with their actions, but we also do not believe that two 18-year olds should bear the entire burden of the homophobic attitudes that exist within our society. If anything, this is a time to reflect and re-educate so that we can create a space for young people to live their lives freely, safely and with dignity.
